

Mutation and horizontal transfer in phylogenetic and linguistic trait data

Phylogenetic methods have recently been applied to studies of cultural evolution.

The main assumption for both fields is that evolution of traits was treelike.

However, events of horizontal transfer between lineages are observed in both fields, sometimes to such a degree that this assumption appears invalid. Recently, several models have been proposed to estimate the degree of horizontal transfer in trait data.